

ABSTRACT OF THE DISCLOSURE

- A method of authenticating in a network-based transaction includes receiving a transaction request from a first party; requesting client identification by a second party, receiving a first authorization code of the first party for authentication by the second party,
- 5 submitting a second authorization code of the second party and the first authorization code of the first party to an electronic identification system for verifying the first and second authorization codes, and sending specific information of the first party to the second party via the second party's electronic form.

AUGUST 14, 2012